

We Are Anonymous

Th3 M0dern D4y R0b1n H00d

'Anonymous' are a large hacktivist group which consist of people all over the world, being as young as 17 years old. Although the acts that were made were for "anti-oppression purposes", they do create a lot of media attention because the attacks are so dangerous and mind-blowing. They are known to completely shut down entire organizations, so they definitely violated several principles of the Code of Ethics. The group Anonymous has a split of support due to one side encouraging and supporting their attacks, and another side declaring they are a threat to society. Saying they don't use their skill to benefit society would be a false statement, but at the same time saying they weren't looking out for people would be false as well.

Sources:

<https://abcnews.go.com/US/worldwide-hacker-group-anonymous/story?id=37761302>

http://www.nbcnews.com/id/41895501/ns/technology_and_science-security/t/what-anonymous/

All the acts that Anonymous has done, from leaking addresses and emails to crashing government websites, it is obvious they violate several terms of the law and the code of ethics, but at the end of the day their only intentions are to create "chaotic good" for awareness.

Anonymous tend to go all in when it comes to their attacks. They leak phone numbers, addresses and other private information because in their minds, it's a step forward in action. Anonymous uses their overpowered abilities to promote and light awareness on causes they support.